

Drum & bugle corps recordings through the years

by Ken Mason

I saw my first drum corps show in 1981, so much of what I know is through study rather than eyewitness experience. Ever since then, I have been collecting drum corps audio recordings and related information with increasing fervor.

In 1989, I established the Drum Corps Information Archives audio library, with the unspoken dream of eventually building a permanent and relatively complete collection of drum and bugle corps recordings for historical preservation. A dozen years later, that dream now seems possible.

What has happened in that time?

I began recording at drum and bugle corps shows in 1988. In 1991, in order to make an earnest attempt to cover the many fine corps that are not featured on DCI's audio products, I offered to provide DCI Division II/III with study tapes, same-day copies of my recordings, free-of-charge (DCI Division II/III graciously covers a portion of my expenses).

The study tape project grew to encompass many of the major division II/III contests and DCI Championships.

Also in 1991, I began traveling to shows of other drum and bugle corps circuits to record. Over the years, increasing interest on my part -- and increasing cooperation from the drum corps circuits -- has resulted in my having the opportunity to record shows in every competition circuit in North America, as well as Drum Corps United Kingdom.

I have recorded the division II/III portion of DCI Championships every year starting in 1995. Starting in 2001, my audio has been used for DCI's audio and video products for those events.

Serving as audio engineer at the DCA Championships since 1998 has allowed me to cover the seniors as well as the juniors.

In 1998, I began a volunteer effort to digitally remaster DCI's library of audio tapes. The DCI tape library includes Ken Kobold's master tapes. Remastering of the Kobold tapes is nearly complete as of this writing.

Also in 1998, I began a similar volunteer effort, working with the Stetson D. Richmond and Alf Wateska master tapes, the only collection of master tapes rivaling DCI's library in size.

Upon completion of all this remastering work, the Drum Corps Information Archives audio library will have brought together the complete contributions of the activity's four most prolific audio engineers (see chart).

In 2001, I began work preserving the Drum Corps Associates master recordings from the 1976-2001 time period.

Engineer	Total # of recordings
Dale Johnson (Sun City, AZ)	629
Ken Kobold (deceased, Ottawa, IL)	3,897
Ken Mason (Marlton, NJ)	3,245
Stetson D. Richmond (dec. Boonton, NJ)	3,682
Larry Rock (Chicago, IL)	835
Alf Wateska (deceased, Pittsburgh, PA)	1,468 people who gave us the recordings of drum corps in the past.

The early years

The earliest drum corps recordings were probably made back in the 1930s -- as early as 1933 -- but the oldest recordings that have been located and transferred to today's audio equipment are from the late 1940s.

It was in 1948 that George Mader recorded a number of corps, both indoors and outdoors, including a trip to the American Legion Nationals in Miami, FL, to capture these sounds in competition. Little did anyone realize what a trend was being started, as not a year would pass by ever again without most top units being recorded by somebody.

In a couple of years, several other individuals became involved. Foremost among them was Bob BellaRosa of Brooklyn, NY, whose work was brought to market under several trade names (BNK, Bob & Tom and National Corps).

BellaRosa would also acquire many of the master tapes of the other early recording pioneers, including Mader (GLM) and Victor Recordings. And unlike other drum corps audio engineers, BellaRosa was an active participant throughout that time, marching with the New York Skyliners.

1950s

Stetson D. Richmond of Boonton, NJ, recorded a contest in 1950 for the sake of his friends with the Caballeros of nearby Hawthorne. Such interest in copies was generated that Richmond's hobby grew to business proportions in 1952.

That year, he recorded several major shows and made copies available to the public via monophonic custom reels and albums on 10-inch vinyl acetate discs. The majority of recordings still to be found from the 1950s are on Richmond's acetates.

Richmond would work continuously through 1972. He never converted to stereo, but he did eventually upgrade to LP production on higher-quality, conventional vinyl, as well as making custom cassettes in the later years.

Richmond became one of the most traveled drum corps audio engineers, seeking out a wide range of contests to expand his selection of corps. In addition to many Eastern circuit shows, he traveled to several World Opens and VFW Nationals, was a perennial standby at the Dream contest in Jersey, City, NJ, and attended

American Legion Nationals every year from 1952 to 1967, usually hitching a ride with the Hawthorne Caballeros.

Richmond also added to his geographic range by teaming up with a dozen other drum and bugle corps audio enthusiasts.

1953

Ed Burke recorded at American Legion and VFW Nationals for several years in the 1950s, marketing his work under the Fanfare label. Based in Florida, he also recorded many shows in that region from the mid-1950s through 1966.

1956

Ken Kobold of Ottawa, IL, provided vital coverage of the Midwest starting in 1956. He quickly became Richmond's Midwestern counterpart, producing custom recordings of his own while devoting some time to the local circuit (Illinois Drum & Bugle Corps Association) and his hometown corps, the Ottawa Crusaders. More about him later.

1958

The most prolific independent commercial producer of drum and bugle corps recordings had to be Fleetwood of Revere, MA. The company started in 1958 with LP (long playing) offerings featuring Eastern Massachusetts circuit corps and the Lt. Norman Prince Princemen senior corps.

Early Fleetwood offerings were available in both monophonic and stereophonic versions, even though stereo was a new concept at this time.

1959

In a typical season of this period, Stetson D. Richmond's offerings included the work of eight different audio engineers, covering a wide range of corps throughout the East and Midwest.

1960

After some time as a regional sales representative for Stetson D. Richmond, Alf Wateska recorded shows for the first time in 1960. He supplied a significant portion of the recordings Stetson D. Richmond marketed from 1960 onward.

Wateska would send his original masters to Richmond, who would then send copies back to Wateska in Pittsburgh.

It was in 1960 that Fleetwood became the central focus of the world of drum and bugle corps recordings, when they recorded both American Legion and VFW Nationals, offering eight four-corps albums from the two combined junior/senior events.

1961

Fleetwood's early fetish with "studio" recordings reached a peak in 1961, when most of their albums consisted of standstill recordings. The Fleetwood van traveled to several corps' rehearsal sites to gather such recordings.

Few field contests were recorded and half of them were not released on albums. Fleetwood would return to the conventional practice of marketing field recordings almost exclusively the following year.

Fortunately, at the same time, Stetson D. Richmond's recording coverage reached a peak, augmented by Wisconsin-based Herb Lathrop's recordings of Midwestern activity. Even Richmond's son, Stet Jr., pitched in, recording several shows himself while Stet Sr. recorded elsewhere the same day.

1962

As a side venture, the Fleetwood Cadet series was spawned to serve corps that would not appear on the regular Fleetwood issues. The Cadet series solicited submittals of recordings from non-Fleetwood engineers and produced albums in smaller quantities with generic covers, enabling smaller circuits such as Eastern Massachusetts or Great Plains to get an album produced.

Dale Johnson started recording in 1962 at several shows in Wisconsin. Though rarely recording out-of-state, he gathered a good selection of corps over the next decade.

Sound de Corps entered the market this season, releasing albums from numerous Midwestern events. Ken Kobold recorded several of their releases in 1962.

1963

With the two major nationals contests staged in Seattle, WA, and Miami, FL, many top corps opted not to travel to either. Corps were looking for another highlight for the 1963 season and Fleetwood was looking for a practical way to record these corps.

Their solution was to create the World Open contest, an independent championship open to all entrants, sponsored by the Fleetwood/Drum Corps News team. Attendance, however, was not as universal as they had hoped, as hardly any Midwestern units made the trip to the first event.

As if matters weren't challenging enough,

Fleetwood was unable to record many of the fine Massachusetts units of the day when one of the corps demanded large royalty payments. As a result, that unit and many of their New England peers went for two or three years without being recorded.

Dale Johnson was the man behind the Sound de Corps LPs starting this year, as Ken Kobold became contest director for the Illinois Drum & Bugle Corps Association, keeping him too busy to record except at the state VFW and American Legion title contests, which were not circuit events. Kobold would serve in this position for five years.

1964

One of the biggest oversights in drum corps audio history took place this year, as the VFW Nationals in Cleveland were not recorded. This show was the long-awaited clash of East and Midwest that was missing from the 1963 season.

Partly as a result, St. Joseph's of Batavia ended up without a recording for 1964. Fortunately, this would be the last time a top-12 caliber junior corps would elude the microphones.

The senior activity was also suffering at this time. Though all top units were recorded, efforts were hampered by the controversy over the new DCA circuit. Conflict polarized most 1964 contests, as DCA and non-DCA corps refused to compete with each other.

Fleetwood's offerings suffered, as even their World Open contest was affected by the withdrawal of several key non-DCA units.

Dale Johnson upgraded his equipment, producing some of the finest quality recordings yet known for most of the Midwest's top corps, filling the void left by Ken Kobold's sabbatical.

Century Custom Recordings, with regional branches scattered throughout the United States, made several interesting recordings in the 1960s, including several upstate New York events and the first album of a Kansas contest in Hutchinson, KS, sponsored by the Sky Ryders.

1965

Dale Johnson recorded the 1965 VFW Nationals, the famous 15-corps finals show held at McCormick Place in Chicago. A four-album set of these recordings was marketed by the old Drum Corps World magazine from Chicago.

MasteRecords, based in Connecticut, produced LPs of several contests in the mid-1960s for both seniors and juniors. The 1965 season was a particularly good one for them, as they took advantage of the still-divided senior activity and offered many of the high-ranking non-DCA senior corps that year.

1966

Peace was restored in the senior activity as the top corps settled their differences and competed in DCA together. The DCA Championships instantly became the premier event of the senior season and the albums Fleetwood produced for that event became the premier senior recordings until the early 1970s.

Amazingly, peace was maintained between the top drum corps audio people in this era as well. Fleetwood and Stetson D. Richmond were often found recording side-by-side at the same contest and, though Fleetwood signed exclusive contracts for certain shows, they also provided Richmond and Wateska with letters granting them permission to record at any such contests.

Similar peaceful co-existence was struck with Ken Kobold when he and Fleetwood next met several years down the line. Without this sort of cooperation, it is unlikely that so many corps would have been recorded each year.

1967

Audio recordings actually decided the outcome of a contest in Racine, WI, on August 5. The Kilties were announced as the victor, but the LaSalle Cadets protested a penalty for excessive stop time that cost them the title.

Dale Johnson returned the following morning to play back his master tape of the contest, which validated their case. Thus, the LaSalle Cadets were declared winners after all.

1968

In 1968, Ken Kobold retired from his other drum corps obligations and began recording drum corps shows in earnest, expanding his travel range and recording the American Legion Nationals each of the next four years. Kobold had already made the switch to stereo the previous year.

SupereRecords lasted only one year, but made their mark with a major advantage in recording quality over competitor Fleetwood that year. They covered only the New York/Ontario area, but caught several top juniors on tour through Toronto.

Audio House of Lawrence, KS, carried on the annual succession of Kansas drum corps recordings starting in 1968. They ended up marketing the top four of the Great Plains area in six of the following eight seasons (the Kansas State American Legion show) as well. Their only other drum corps recordings were of the Drum Corps West circuit championships in 1974 through 1976.

Alf Wateska covered the first U.S. Open contest in Marion, OH.

Fleetwood Cadet released albums of the World Open prelim shows and class B corps -- a total of 56 performances spanning eight albums.

1969

The next few years prove to be the most prolific time for recordings of the huge junior corps activity of the day. The Stetson D. Richmond/Alf Wateska effort in the East is augmented by several other contributors, while Ken Kobold and Dale Johnson continued to cover the Midwest.

Portable reel-to-reel recorders enabled fans to record shows from the stands, a more popular (and necessary) practice in the West.

Fleetwood increased their attendance at major shows over the next three years. As a result, the U.S. Open finals were recorded by three independent setups, as Fleetwood joined Ken Kobold and the Richmond/Wateska team.

Stetson D. Richmond recorded at VFW preliminaries, arguably the largest single junior contest held up to that time with 63 competing units.

1970

Fleetwood traveled to both Portland, OR (American Legion), and Miami, FL (VFW), for the two nationals contests. Equally surprising, they are not alone in recording either of the shows.

1971

Ken Kobold made further upgrades to his equipment, producing some of the most memorable recordings ever made of drum and bugle corps.

Again, as in 1969, the U.S. Open is recorded by three parties.

1972

Fleetwood's contribution ended in an eventful 1972 season in which audio recordings would become a significant issue in the activity. DCI and the Fleetwood/Drum Corps News team would be at odds with each other throughout the season in a conflict stemming from their differing philosophies on the selection of contest judges.

Meanwhile, as DCI was formed, revenue from recording sales was their main source of funding. To make the most of what they had, DCI decided not to allow others to sell recordings of the 13 DCI member corps.

Fleetwood had no intention of abiding by DCI's ruling. The conflict escalated to the point where the DCI member corps all withdrew from several major shows sponsored by Fleetwood/Drum Corps News, including the World Open, and Fleetwood was not allowed to record at any DCI shows.

Fleetwood countered by signing the World Open champion Kilties to an exclusive contract that kept them off the DCI Championship albums that year.

Ken Kobold's greatest claim to fame came upon his selection as Drum Corps International's recording engineer in their inaugural 1972 season. Kobold would go on to record virtually every DCI Championship week performance from 1972 to 1987, traveling from Denver to Montreal to Miami in the process and making him the primary source of junior corps recordings during that period.

As the only audio engineer for DCI's first 10 championships, his sounds not only appeared on all the DCI albums from that era, but also supplied audio for the first DCI telecasts.

In Denver, dB was formed alongside the present Drum Corps World in late 1971 by Dick Blake, who is better known for his long association with Fleetwood. The company aligned itself with DCI, becoming the marketing arm of DCI in 1972 and early 1973, when the label disappeared and DCI internalized recording production and marketing.

The dB label's first album release for DCI, the "International Preview", was an interesting effort to compile recordings of the 13 charter members of DCI as quickly as possible. Pre-season standstill recordings and early-season field recordings were gathered from a variety of sources. The turmoil in the Anaheim Kingsmen camp forced dB to resort to a 1971 recording of that corps.

1973

Stetson D. Richmond passed away in the spring of the year. Alf Wateska would inherit his master tapes, preserving them over the following two dozen years.

Richmond's death could have spelled total disaster for the recording situation in the East. But by coincidence, this same year saw the U.S.

Open adopt DCI's practice of full-length preliminary shows. With many Eastern units traveling to Marion, the recordings of that contest go a long way toward filling the gap.

In the next three years, the U.S. Open schedule forced prelims for class A and open class to run simultaneously at different show sites. Ken Kobold and Alf Wateska teamed up to cover the complete event each of these years. Wateska upgraded to stereo at this time.

Ironically, DCI did not prevent the release of recordings of their member corps by others for several years after Fleetwood's demise. Drum Corps News continued to record the World Open each year, using the name Performance + Productions for their 1973 releases.

DCI began marketing recordings of their own championships in 1973, their second season. The 1973 set featured all 12 finalists, but was the only offering from DCI that year. The early-season recordings ("Western Preview") had been issued under the dB label.

CRS (Connecticut Recording Studios) recorded and marketed DCA Championships in 1973 and 1974, along with a couple of additional shows from those years.

1974

Again, many Eastern junior units were fortunate to have the opportunity to be recorded, as DCI Championships came into their region (Ithaca, NY). With DCI held in the East for the two following seasons as well, and Ken Kobold recording the entire championship week each time, coverage of the East would continue.

Steve Vickers, just taking over Drum Corps World and the remnants of dB Records, encouraged DCI to expand their championship albums to cover 20 corps. DCW took on the financial responsibility for volumes 4 and 5 in 1974 and interest in corps 13 through 20 caught on. DCI repeated the five-volume set in future years.

1975

Drum Corps News marketed recordings under their own name now, producing albums of the World Open and several senior contests, the DCA Championships being one of them.

1976

Consolidated Music Sales, which was owned by John Laskowski from, Syracuse, NY, using the marketing name Drum Corps Associates Sales, took over DCA senior corps recordings in 1976, offering an early-season pair of albums and the top 12 finishers from championships.

After repeating that strategy in 1977, they offered only the top 12 recordings each year thereafter. Marice Stith, who had performed some work for Fleetwood previously, served as DCA recording engineer throughout the DCA Sales tenure, which would last 22 years.

Controversy rose up once more as DCI re-introduced their policy of not allowing member corps (top 12) to appear on other companies' products. Drum Corps News weeded out DCI members from their 1976 World Open albums, still featuring two units that would go on to break into DCI Finals later in the year.

Plans to market albums of the Canadian Nationals, a post-DCI show, were scrapped due to the loss of two headliner corps to DCI membership.

Disaster struck as the entire collection of Fleetwood and Drum Corps News master tapes and back stock were consumed in an office fire, obviously the biggest loss of drum corps audio history. Drum Corps News never re-entered the recording business.

1977

Staging DCI Championships in Colorado resulted in a season where Ken Kobold would not record anywhere further east than his home in Illinois. Enter Alf Wateska, who recorded annually at the American International Open (AIO) contest in Butler, PA, in the 1970s. Many of the fine Eastern units that couldn't make the trip to Denver were at the AIO contest.

IRA Recordings staked their claim to fame by marketing recordings of the UOEC circuit championship featuring the Bridgemen, who had been disqualified after finishing fourth at DCI finals. IRA also produced the Garden State Circuit albums in 1978.

Canadian Nationals albums were issued this time around, even without the two top Ontario units. The Fantasy label would provide Nationals albums again in 1978 and 1979.

1978

Despite the Garden State Circuit's first (and only) mass-produced LPs this year, the days of recording releases for drum corps circuits other than DCI and DCA are just about over.

1979

DCI contest crews convince Ken Kobold to abandon his front-sideline, four-microphone setup in favor of a pair of microphones mounted on a single pole at the 50 yard line, pushed back to the front of the bleachers. While this change provides space for setup of grounded equipment per new rules adopted in this period, the quality of the DCI recordings deteriorates dramatically as a result, to the dismay of many fans.

1980

In early July, the Blue Devils and Santa Clara Vanguard are recorded under controlled conditions for a special album release, titled "State of the Art".

1981

DCI introduces the cassette version of their annual recordings, as DCA Sales had the previous year.

1982

Larry Rock and Jim Unrath, working with the TV crew at DCI finals, produce digitally-mastered audio recordings of the top 12 for DCI. Using six microphones, and allowed to space them across the front-field area, they are able to recapture the balance that had been missing from recent DCI recordings. Larry Rock would continue to work on all of DCI's releases from 1983 through 1994.

The DCI recording ban (see "A popular misconception" below) takes effect. Ken Kobold continues to record DCI championship week each year, but Alf Wateska is forced to stop recording.

1983

Since many junior units opt not to travel to Miami for DCI, and Ken Kobold no longer travels to major shows outside of DCI Championships, the recording ban makes it's greatest impact on coverage of the activity in 1983. Dozens of class A units tour to the major shows in Butler and Marion without being recorded at any point in the season.

Video recordings, marketed tentatively for several years previously, take a firm foothold as DCI's complete top 25 is made available on video this season and every year thereafter.

1984

The DCI albums are expanded once again, this time to include 24 corps.

It is not known whether any recordings of DCA prelims prior to 1984 have survived. Some prelim performances were never recorded in the first place. But beginning in 1984, the recordings from preliminaries were retained.

1987

Ken Kobold's last recordings were made in 1987. Kobold continued to make his recordings available via custom reels and cassettes until his death in late 1991.

The first drum corps CD ever issued was DCI's "State of the Art 2", featuring five top units from recent DCI championship recordings. The success of this issue set the stage for the introduction of CDs for the top 12 in 1988 and 1989.

Though portions of DCA Championships had been videotaped on several occasions, the first videos released to the general public were in 1987. Videos of DCA are made available annually in following years, though the production task changes hands many times.

Rain causes elimination of the DCA finals competition, with standstill exhibitions staged for the audience instead. For the DCA albums, some corps had their standstill performance selected, while the field show from the preliminary competition was picked for the other units.

1989

After expanding video production and marketing to cover class A and A-60 in the preceding two seasons, DCI ceases all recording of those corps in 1989 and 1990. Only the open-class top 25 are recorded.

1990

DCI discontinues album production, expanding the CDs to cover the top 21. Corps 22-24 remain available on cassettes. Similarly, DCA eliminates albums, but that change leaves cassettes as the only format offered.

1991

At the urging of the newly-organized body of class A/A-60 units, DCI resumes video recording of their championships. These videos are not offered to the public, but each unit receives a copy of their performance.

1993

Videos of DCI Championships for the renamed divisions II and III are once again offered to the general public in 1993, but the following year's championships are once again not recorded at all.

1995

DCI Productions was formed by an agreement between DCI and IBM Interactive Media to handle DCI audio and video products. In addition to recording DCI's championship week events for the next four seasons, DCI Productions re-released the first 25 years of finalists recordings (300 corps) on a commemorative CD collection.

1996

The first senior corps CD release is a top-six disc from DCA Championships. The top 12 continue to be available on cassette.

1998

Digital Audio Resources begins producing the DCA recordings in 1998. The top 12 units are all included on the CDs for the first time. In another first, recordings of all other participating units are made available.

DCI's "Mid-Season Selections" CDs mark the first time in 25 years that audio recordings of a contest outside of championship week had been released.

1999

Improving financial and organizational health permits DCI to internalize marketing and distribution of audio/video products once again. IBM's involvement in DCI audio and video concludes, and Larry Rock returns as audio engineer for DCI.

2000

The first DVD recordings of drum corps are marketed for both DCI and DCA.

2001

Individual corps CDs are made available for DCI Division II and III units for the first time.

Statistics

Compiling the names and active years of all known competing drum and bugle corps since World War II, roughly half of all juniors and two-thirds of all senior corps have been recorded.

These numbers may sound discouraging at first, but a look at the higher-ranking units reveals that drum corps audio engineers have had good taste. In both the junior and senior activities, 97% of those units ranking in the top 10% competitively in a given year have been recorded.

The following lists summarize which corps were recorded in which years. Space does not permit listing all of the nearly 20,000 individual recordings documented. Only full-length field recordings of competing junior and senior corps are listed in these summaries.

Ken Kobold

The following listing covers all recordings known to have been made by Ken Kobold. Virtually every one of these corps has been preserved through the remastering of the Drum Corps International tape library (see "Preserving the Sounds of Historic Drum & Bugle Corps").

Stetson Richmond

This list includes all corps for which Stetson D. Richmond made full field recordings available. About 75% of these recordings were recorded by Richmond personally, with at least a dozen other people (most notably, Alf Waterska) contributing the remainder.

Since not all the master recordings have been attributed to their origins, they are all grouped together in these listings.

Dale Johnson

Following are lists of the competing units for which Dale Johnson recorded full field shows. Recordings of standstills, winter corps and shortened-format prelim shows are not included here.

The 1965 VFW Nationals held inside McCormick Place, Chicago's massive convention center, were recorded by Dale and released as a four-volume set of record albums through the Chicago-based Drum Corps World magazine.

Fleetwood

For collectors of albums to the DCI/DCA era, "Fleetwood Standard Series" lists the Fleetwood mono, stereo and "compatible" stereo albums numerically.

In the earlier years, Fleetwood issued each album in separate monophonic and stereophonic versions, due to the differences between the two systems at that time. Stereo albums were given even numbers with the prefix "FSLP" while the corresponding monophonic album carried an odd number with the "FLP" prefix.

On this list, the stereo album number is given in full, with the last digit(s) of the corresponding mono album following. As the technology provided greater compatibility between the two formats, Fleetwood switched to a single stereo album issue playable on both types of equipment, "compatible" stereo. These albums were given the "FCLP" prefix.

The second list, "Fleetwood Special Issues," covers Fleetwood Cadet and other issues not included in that numbering sequence.

Please note: There were more recordings that fall under this category, but information was unavailable from the sources that were consulted. Fleetwood had a significant side business making small quantities of custom albums for drum and bugle corps and bands, mostly in the New England area. Unfortunately, a fire destroyed all of the master tapes and back stock of the company during the late 1970s.

A popular misconception

How many times have you heard people complain about not being allowed to record from their seat in the stands at a DCI or DCA show? Usually, you hear the familiar assumption, "They're greedy -- they just want to force you to buy their CDs/videos", etc. Well, it's not that simple.

Copyright laws were introduced to protect the rights of the original composers and performers of musical works to a share of the proceeds from sales of their music.

In order to simplify the process of negotiating such royalties, independent agencies (i.e. ASCAP, BMI) have reached agreements with most of today's composers and performers and other performing groups that wish to use these compositions pay fees on a predetermined scale to these agencies, who then pass on the appropriate percentages to the original artists.

Anyone who sells recordings of copyrighted music without having paid the applicable royalty fees is breaking the law.

Sound recordings of such groups can also be produced under these copyright laws, again with fees that apply. Here, the copyright law also protects the creator of the sound recording, who may obtain a copyright for the recording itself.

Once this is done, the copyright holder is legally required to make a reasonable effort to prevent "piracy" (unauthorized sale of recordings). This obligation is twofold:

The holder of the sound recording copyright could be sued by the original composers/performers of the music for unpaid royalties, damages and so forth.

The copyright holder may be deemed by the courts as having forfeited their own rights for the sound recording if they fail to demonstrate having taken reasonable measures to discourage piracy. The standard practice used at musical events is to prohibit recording by anyone without the expressed written consent of the copyright holder.

The irony of the whole situation is that DCI, contrary to what many believe, has been too lenient on the recordings issue.

DCI procrastinated until 1982 before enacting any policy at all concerning recording, when they should have acted as soon as they began complying with the law in its current form, which was 1978 at the latest (the first appearance of the copyright notice on the DCI album covers).

And the policy they instituted was to offer recording permits to fans. Thus, any number of people could have obtained "expressed written consent" to record at designated shows. The recording permits were discontinued after several years, at least partly due to lack of interest.

Preserving the sounds of historic drum & bugle corps

What is remastering? Isn't that just a fancy word for making a fresh copy of an original?

It's not that simple. Identifying, cataloguing and transferring recordings to a digital format at the proper pitch (tape speed), preserving the quality as faithfully as possible, is a special process.

Remastering drum corps audio recordings is not as easy as it might seem. Here's a look at the challenges of identifying and digitally remastering the reel-to-reel tapes of our drum corps past.

Identification and cataloguing

Merely identifying the performing units can be a daunting challenge. Most of Ken Kobold's tapes are adequately and legibly labeled, as are Alf Wateska's. A few mistakes sneak by, though. Most of these cases are recordings sent to them by others, which were often not labeled well to begin with.

Stetson D. Richmond's cataloguing system was quite different from most people. Richmond assigned each corps a number and archived his masters annually so that corps were grouped in numeric order by reel for each year. The complications of this system extend beyond the obvious cross-referencing task --

- Though corps are grouped by numbers, the order in which they appear on the reel is never clear.

- Some recordings are introduced with a voice-over by Richmond, reciting the corps, date and location of the event and other pertinent details, even which machine he was using in some cases. Very helpful. Roughly half of his recordings, however, do not use that technique.

- The master list of numbers has a few numbers missing.

- Name changes, mergers and feeder units tend to cause confusion, leading to mistaken identities.

- Some tapes have been labeled five times over, with no way to tell which is the correct information. Often, numbers are written on masking tape to cover previous labeling.

- The handwriting is not always legible.

So even identifying the recordings involves a good deal of detective work, cross-referencing written identifications against contest scores and other documentation, and consulting known repertoire files for additional confirmation of each unit's identity.

Naturally, some corps are easily recognizable, but only to a person familiar with drum and bugle corps of that given time frame.

Remastering -- playback

Remastering professionally-recorded tapes is relatively simple. The pros record special calibration tones on their tapes that are used for calibrating the speed, recording level and head alignment of the playback machine later.

Analog tapes recorded by hobbyists are a completely different matter. To make a long story short, a great deal of research, effort and patience must be put in to determine the correct tape speed for each recording accurately.

If the tape speed does not match the speed at which it was recorded, tempos will be noticeably inaccurate, pitches will be out-of-tune (by as much as a full step in cases I have worked with) and show lengths will vary (an 11-minute show could be 30 seconds off).

Determining the correct tape speed can only be done by playing the recordings and analyzing the following factors:

- Elapsed time between timing signals: The only quantitative measure available to set tape speed is the duration of execution judging, usually indicated by the timing judge's pistol. Since timing judges make mistakes, pistols occasionally fail to fire and timing rules change with the year or the circuit, the other factors need to be examined for concurrence.

- Pitch of the horns: Horn pitch is the most readily available evidence, but knowing what to conclude from it requires familiarity with the tendencies of each corps', horn line over the years and the weather conditions at performance time.

Temperature, wind and rain all affect the pitch of the horns. One show I was remastering from 1973 had the flattest horn pitches you will ever hear in that era, seemingly impossible. But this show was the season opener in Kenosha, WI, legendary among drum corps participants of the area for its brutally cold evenings.

- Pitch of keyboard percussion: Xylophones and marimbas tend to provide a more consistent pitch reference, since their tuning is not readily adjustable like brass instruments. Keyboard percussion is most helpful for recordings that lack timing signals, such as when DCI eliminated execution judging in 1984.

- Pedigree of the tape itself: Some of these master tapes are not the original recordings. Aging tapes were copied to fresh tape and then eventually discarded due to deterioration and thus, the copies became the "masters". Tape speed varies from machine to machine, so the copying process could affect tape speeds.

Kobold, Richmond and Wateska all had several different tape decks at any given time. Ken Kobold's audio workshop was quite a setup, with six decks wired together to enable him to run off custom tapes at maximum efficiency.

Certain masters are copies of the now-discarded originals and, while some were copied all at once using the same machine, others were done using several decks.

While deck #1 played the last corps on a tape, Kobold could be lining up the next corps on deck #2 to save time. Kobold's 1974 tapes must have been done this way, as tape speeds vary widely, with both timing and horn pitch proving that fact.

- Habits of the audio engineer (maintenance of machines, use of backup machines, etc.): Tape speed (among other things) also may drift out of calibration over time. Ken Kobold brought his decks in for re-calibration every year, so each year's master tapes tend toward a slightly different tape speed than the previous year.

Stetson D. Richmond usually ran two tape decks at a show for redundancy and his masters from any given show are often a mixture of recordings from two different machines as a result.

- Behavior of the machines used: Battery-powered tape recorders are often unable to maintain a constant tape speed.

Occasionally, a malfunctioning plug-in deck can introduce tape speed variations. Of course, decks with a pitch control knob provide a means to change the tape speed purposely.

Remastering the copy

The choice of best recording format and medium to copy to is a subject that is constantly evolving, especially with today's advances in digital storage media. There are two factors that will remain relatively constant over time, though.

Discs offer greater potential stability and durability than tapes. This is particularly true in the digital domain, where the current professional standard for stereo audio is digital audio tape (DAT). DAT is unacceptable for long-term storage. The tape is similar in size and strength than an ordinary cassette tape, but is subjected to a transport mechanism closer in behavior to a VHS video machine.

The tape wrinkles very easily, causing mistracking of the signal (static noise), rendering the music unrecoverable. And all the usual magnetic frailties of other forms of tape apply to DAT as well. CDs, MiniDiscs and other optical, disc-based media store data safe from the effects of magnetic fields.

Digital formats offer the ability to make near-perfect copies for continued long-term preservation, while analog formats suffer greater losses in quality with each generation of copying.

Findings

Audio engineering is a rough job and everyone has had their difficulties at some point. Those tapes offer a unique view of the individual challenges each person faced and the choices they made.

Remember, these men were hobbyists. Ken Kobold, Stetson D. Richmond and Alf Wateska -- not one of them earned a living from the drum corps activity. They all had day jobs and pursued drum corps audio in their spare time with what limited finances they could allocate.

In light of that consideration, it comes as no surprise that neither Kobold nor Richmond retained masters of every single recording they ever made.

Kobold appears to have retained about 70% of his masters, discarding many recordings which duplicated corps he recorded again at shows later the same year (and perhaps discarding a couple of singles accidentally in the process). As a result, many of his recordings from Drum Corps Midwest Championships and the DCI Midwest are nowhere to be found.

Stetson Richmond had a different system. As alluded to earlier, Richmond consolidated his masters each year, discarding some of his duplicates and rearranging/recopying individual cuts so that the preferred recordings of different corps were stored on reels in the same order as their names appeared on his master list of corps. Overall, he probably retained about the same percentage of his collection as Kobold.

Unfortunately, in the earlier years, perhaps due to lack of interest in the lower-placing corps, Richmond appears to have discarded some of his singles, namely the lower-placing finishers at American Legion Nationals in 1952-1954.

Ken Kobold's tapes are in the best condition, primarily because Kobold always used the finest quality tape available. It also appears likely that some of his most popular older tapes were remastered before they had a chance to deteriorate to a noticeable degree.

Again, as mentioned before, the entire 1974 season's masters were remastered by Kobold, but it is possible that all the tapes from 1975 and later are originals.

The most common problems encountered with the Kobold masters would be stray adhesive causing sticking during playback, jerking the tape and affecting the sound, or adhesive getting on the signal side of the tape and preventing a smooth read by the head.

The effort required to catch any such problems is worthwhile, as removal of the offending adhesive can be 100% effective.

Occasionally, a tape is found to be wound upside-down on the reel (or twisted). Surprisingly, the tape will play, but the quality of sound is impaired. With the wide variations in recording quality due to microphone selection and the effects of weather, an upside-down tape could slip by unnoticed.

Familiarity with the recordings develops an ear for the expected quality and some research on the weather conditions at these shows is a good precaution.

The masters from 1975-1978 show an assortment of problems stemming from the quality of the tape of that era. Ironically, recording tape manufactured from about 1975 through the mid-to-late 1980s suffered from several ailments not found in tape of earlier years.

Some of these tapes are losing their emulsion, the magnetic layer of the tape which contains the recording information. At its worst, the transparent patches of tape left behind can sound just as blank as they look.

Often, the deterioration is in an earlier stage, causing a slight rippling effect to the sound, which may go unnoticed over open-air speakers.

Several of Ken Kobold's 1975 recordings are found to be in that state, while numerous 1975 and 1976 recordings of his show visible deterioration without any audible losses (yet).

Other tapes from the 1975-1978 period were prone to embedded impurities. Sometimes, the tape itself has what looks like a wood-grain pattern, which can potentially impair the tape's recordability at that spot.

The texture and chemical properties of some of these tapes are such that particles of dirt or metal adhere to the tape much more readily than tapes of other vintage. When such particles were embedded when the tape was recorded, they can cause dropouts.

If embedded after the recording is made, the particle may either obstruct reading by the playback head, or (if large enough) physically alter the tape's travel enough to interfere with proper head contact. Both problems cause dropouts or dips in signal level, possibly even warbles on certain machines. Careful removal of the offending particle can expose the underlying tape, fixing the problem.

Several defects present in the 1977 DCI finals recordings (original issue and/or commemorative series) were fixed in this manner. Removing more than just the particle, however, could obviously do more harm than good.

Another more commonly-encountered problem of tapes from the late 1970s and 1980s is "sticky-shed," a condition caused when the binder, an adhesive that holds the various layers of the tape together, absorbs moisture and migrates to the tape surface.

Tapes in this condition often cannot even be rewound, much less played, as accumulation of the gummy residue will quickly drag the deck to a screeching halt (literally, it's a sickening sound). These tapes can be restored by "baking" carefully in a convection oven to drive the moisture out of the tape and induce the binder to return to its proper place in the tape.

Careful if you're trying this at home, though, as most home ovens are unsuitable for the task for a variety of reasons. Ken Kobold's 1987 masters and the DCA masters of the 1980s, exhibit this phenomenon.

Stetson D. Richmond's tapes provide a stark contrast to those of Ken Kobold. One must bear in mind that the market for blank tape was a bit different back when he got started in the 1950s. Recording tape was a more valuable commodity.

Entrepreneurs were gathering scraps of tape and splicing them together to sell by the reel at a reduced price. Many of Richmond's masters are on such tape, with aging splices so numerous that it can take an entire evening just to wind through the tape once, re-splicing as you go and playing the tape is postponed until the next day.

Because of these age-old splices, many of Richmond's recordings have at least one obvious dropout over the course of the unit's performance.

Richmond also recycled tape to a greater extent than Kobold. Each year, during the winter and spring, he would copy his original high-speed, full-track masters down to slower-speed, half-track format for long-term storage, freeing 75% of the tape for recycling.

Richmond also discarded some duplicates at this stage, reclaiming even more tape. In this manner, Richmond was able to travel to shows every weekend during the season and record a tremendous number of corps on a limited budget.

As he typically ran two tape decks when recording a show for safety's sake, the backups would typically be recycled as well. Naturally, Richmond kept an eye out for defects in the tape he used, but some tapes did not age well.

Older tapes, say from the 1940s and 1950s, are often acetate-based, while virtually all recording tape sold in the 1960s and later used the newer mylar material. Among its advantages, mylar generally ages better, but it is prone to stretching if excessive stress is applied.

Improving tape transport technology and thicker tape eliminated this problem in the 1970s, but the masters of the 1960s include an occasional stretched patch of tape, which warps the pitch of the music and misaligns the recorded tracks.

Acetate tape does not stretch -- it will break instead. Careful splicing can restore a clean break to allow faithful playback. However, acetate tapes have a tendency to curl and there is no way to reverse that process.

Typical curling for acetate tape is lengthwise, such that the edges of the tape still contact the playback head, but the middle of the tape (and most of the signal) is lifted away from the head.

Applying pressure to flatten the tape against the head is not often effective with tape as dry and brittle as acetate and may cause breakage. And, of course, if splices or other irregularities are already present, they will catch on the pressure pad and cause flutter.

Even mylar tape can curl in certain patterns if not evenly wound for storage and protected from extremes of temperature and humidity. Poorly-stored mylar tapes may exhibit a fine corrugated pattern resembling a Ruffles potato chip or helical (spiral) curling which renders a sound that fades in and out in waves as the twisted tape surfs through the player.

Thankfully, the majority of the tapes from any era, even 50 years ago, are free from curling at this point.

Editor's note: Ken Mason is in the process of transferring the entire collections of Stetson D. Richmond, Alf Wateska and Ken Kobold from the original reel-to-reel masters to digital discs in order to preserve them. His efforts have resulted in the comprehensive lists contained in this chapter.

He is also working on the master tapes from the 1978 to 1998 era of Drum Corps Associates Championships.

Because the vast majority of music used by corps from the late 1940s through the early 1970s was never copyright-cleared, at the present time (2002) these recordings are not available to the public.

Unfortunately, all of the Fleetwood Records master tapes and back stock of albums were lost in a fire.

All-told, Ken Mason has amassed a listing of 22,000 performances during the last 50+ years. This is an on-going project that will hopefully result in all recordings being collected in one place and eventually accessible.
